Jennifer Mallory

Sometimes when the wind's just right,
I feel your breath upon me.
A special softness that soothes my soul
With a warmth that tingles and embraces,
And it smells of you.
Fresh white laundry and cinnamon sugar
With a hint of sweet lavender shampoo
And some other smell
That I can't quite put my finger on,
But I think it must be close
To the essence of love.
And when I feel that faint breeze
That quickly kisses by
And runs its fingers through my hair,
I know you're watching over me,
I can feel it in the air.
